

Battlefield License Plate Travels to West Tennessee

Reenactor's Daughter Recalls Memorable Trip to Shiloh

This battlefield preservation supporter displayed her personalized license plate at the present day Shiloh United Methodist Church. She purchased the plate in honor of her late father who used to take the family to events at military parks across the United States, Shiloh being one of her fondest memories.

The Battle of Shiloh, fought April 6-7, 1862 in southwest Tennessee resulted in more than 23,000 casualties, outnumbering those inflicted in all of our nation's prior wars combined. It opened the way for Union forces to control vital rail centers in Mississippi and emphatically dispelled hopes for a short and relatively bloodless Civil War.

A reconstruction of the Shiloh Methodist Episcopal Church stands on the original church site where some of the most intense fighting of the battle occurred.

Show Your Place Across The State

Share a photo of your Civil War Battlefield plate at a favorite Tennessee battlefield. Email your photo and the name of the battlefield to info@tcwpa.org. Show your support for battlefield preservation and help share the stories of Tennessee's rich Civil War history.

The Civil War Battlefield Preservation plate has traveled Tennessee roads for over two years since its launch in October of 2013. Proceeds from the sale of the plate help to protect and interpret important battlefield sites across Tennessee. You can purchase this unique license plate at any County Clerk office for $36 plus your regular registration fee.
